

references.bib

Honours Project

Jack Montgomery

July 2024

1 Introduction

Active inference is a unified framework for modelling sentient behaviour, deeply rooted in Bayesian statistics and the free energy principle. It posits that living organisms continuously update their internal generative models of the world to minimise the prediction error between their expected and actual sensory observations. ?